Unicorns

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

I always thought that unicorns were the most misunderstood of the magical creatures. I mean, let's just look at their lore. They only approach virgins, right? Except very few people know that a "virgin", in this context, means a person whose blood has never been used for magic. Unicorns couldn't give less of a shit that you didn't wait until marriage.

But above all? They're total jerks. There's nothing pure and gentle about their spirits. I should know.

Chapter 3 by Always Patricia

My first experience with a unicorn was actually in college. My friends had gotten their hands on some rather exotic potions, were feeling pretty rowdy, and in all their intoxicated genius, thought it would be a great idea to go catch a unicorn and ride it.

"I know how to summon unicorns," my friend Merlin belched. His hair was slowly turning back and forth from green and purple. "I've brewed some really virulent potions together to achieve this effect."

"But you need gold for that," Merlin blurted out. "I've got a gold coin, but it's not enough." He was slowly drifting around the room, rotating in a counter-clockwise fashion.

"My dad keeps a fair amount of gold bars under his bed," I offered. "If we put it back before he notices, we should be in the clear."

"Let's go then!" shouted Merlin, grabbing an umbrella and hoisting it into the air like a sword. And so out into the night we went to retrieve my father's gold.

No sooner had we left the threshold when Tina's mom appeared before us, dressed in the robe of the Elders. "TINA," she roared, "IT'S PAST YOUR CURFEW."

"BAghsalkekaDK!" cried Merlin. "How will we ever get past her?"

"Go on without me!" cried Tina. Or at least that's what we thought she said, because her mom wouldn't stop talking, bellowing, "YOU SMELL LIKE RAINBOW DRINK" and "I'VE TOLD YOU THESE KIDS ARE NO GOOD FOR YOU, SWEETIE PIE" and stuff.

"We can't!" I yelled over the voice of her mother. "We need shape-shifter to impersonate my mom and sneak into the bedroom! We need you, Tina Shay!"

And with that, I pulled a frying pan out of my bottomless pockets and chucked it at Tina's Mom's head.

Chapter 5 by Garryn Fulcomer

It landed on her head with a clang. or was it a bang? It was something and it knocked her out cold.

Chapter 6 by Rn D

We continued onwards. Somehow we managed to make it to my house, which my parents had banned me from entering after learning about my "hobby". This was going to be fun

I unlocked the door and slowly pushed it open. Now looking like my mom, Tina walked past and I told her where my parents' bedroom was.

She nodded taking off.

A few short moments later she reappeared looking like herself holding three gold bars. A huge smile was on her face as she paraded them around to us and we all quietly cheered before running off to our next stop.
